10 Bostonians Fined for Row at Billerica

LOWELL, July 27.—Ten Bostonians were fined $5 each today for disturbing the peace at Billerica. The men went to Lincoln Grove last night to enjoy a cottage but found it tenanted. They made so much noise that the cottagers summoned the police who waited until the rioters were asleep and then handcuffed them. The men were Edward B. Bissett, Charles E. D'Amico, James H. Bole, Edward J. O'Neil, Thomas E. Dougherty, Harold J. Cunningham, Arthur B. Smith, Frank J. Vaughn, Owen Hooley and William J. O'Hara.

Pawtucket Girl of Five Routs Intruder

PAWTUCKET, July 27.—Lottie Bessie, five years old, of No. 7 Dunell avenue, awake early today and saw a strange man poking his head through her bedroom window. She grabbed the man by the hair and screamed. Mrs. F. H. Bessie, mother of the child, ran into the room in time to see the intruder jump through the window, leaving a tuft of hair in the child's fist.

Somerville Boy Thief Sentenced

For taking $137.89 from the safe of A. B. Pilon, druggist, of No. 21 Highland avenue, Somerville, June 24, while delivering for candy, Frank McLuskey, nineteen, of No. 10 Bristol street, Cambridge, was sentenced to the Concord reformatory today, before Judge Wentworth in the Somerville District Court. He appeared in court in 1913 for the same offense.

Blueberry Pie-Fest Costs Man $5 Per Pie

Patrick McKee, nineteen, of East seventh street, South Boston, who the police say admits nothing could tempt him so much as a blueberry pie, fined $50—$10 on a drunkenness charge and $4 each for five pies alleged to have been stolen in the South Boston district court today.

Cleary Arraigned for Death of Son-in-Law

HAVERTHAW, N. Y., July 27.—William V. Cleary, town clerk, waived examination when arraigned today on a charge of having murdered his son-in-law of six days before his death, when the latter called at Cleary's office to get his hair cut and wedding to the politician's daughter. He was held for the Grand Jury without bail.

FOLLOW NEW ADA TAYLOR CLEW TODAY

Preparations for the inquest on the death of Ada Taylor, whose body was found in the surf at Winthrop, are being made today, while the police are following a new clew developed from a second and more minute search of the contents of the young woman's suit case, which was found checked at the North Station. The police are pressing their quest for the person who was last in the company of Ada Taylor, and regard the new suit case clew as particularly promising. Just what it is they will not admit.

The time of the inquest will be set by Judge Joseph H. Thayer of the East Boston court. A large number of persons are expected to appear at the inquest.

Chief West of the Metropolitan Police said today:

"I believe the dead woman, who probably now lies in her grave in Canada, I should like to see today in all of the investigations by officers who have been found that would show that Miss Taylor was not a mere young woman."

"I believe she was a hard-working, conscientious girl, who had considerable misfortune during the last few years. We have not finished with our investigation by any means."

Locked in Room, Lad Flees for 24th Time

Indors Shadow, twelve, of No. 2 Ohio street, is a youthful hoodlum. Mrs. Shadow locked him in a room on the third floor and took away all his clothes. Three hours later the Metropolitan police found him prowling near North Street. He was found and wearing an old coat. He managed to get out on the fire escape and run away from home for the twenty-fourth time.

ASK CARNEGIE MEDAL FOR PHONE GIRL WHO SAVED DROWNING MEN

ago she saved a boy from drowning and got a medal from the Massachusetts Humane Society. Citizens of Winthrop are going to see that her bravery and presence of mind yesterday is called to the attention of the Carnegie Medal.

Miss Ballen is twenty-one and lives at No. 30 Main street. Her sister, Florence, who was with her, is nineteen.

Charles Lowell, fifty-four, No. 625 Pleasant street, Winthrop, is the father of Miss Ballen and her sister.

Miss Ballen and her sister were rowing in Belle Isle inlet with Thomas Carleton, their cousin. Suddenly they heard Lowell, who was rowing with a group while swimming, cry out and sink.

Carleton, who was in a bathing suit, rowed to the spot where the man "went down." As Lowell went down, Carleton pulled him up and threw him from the boat and brought him to the surface. As he did so Lowell got a death grip on him and both went down.

Miss Ballen grabbed the oars and told her sister to watch. When the men appeared again, Miss Ballen caught her cousin by the hair and held on. The boat tipped and she was nearly pulled overboard, but managed to hold on and directed her sister to row for shore.

Lowell was unconscious by this time and Carleton pulled himself into the boat and rowed with Miss Ballen's help. Dr. Lowell in Lowell was still unconscious when the boat reached shore. Carleton and Miss Ballen rolled him and gave him first aid and then called a doctor, who revived him.

Today Miss Ballen is the heroine of Winthrop. Less than two years ago she saved a boy from drowning and got a medal from the Massachusetts Humane Society.

GEORGE GOULD SUED BY WIFE OF HOWARD

NEW YORK, July 27.—Mrs. Katherine Clemons Gould, who was separated from Howard Gould by judicial decree in September, 1909, charges in a Supreme Court action that George J. Gould has entered into a collusive agreement with his brother, Howard Gould, to defraud her of her dower interest in Howard Gould's vast real property.

At the present time Mrs. Gould is living in Virginia and receiving $1,000 a month alimony under her separation decree. As she is not divorced from Howard Gould and as he cannot remarry during her lifetime, she is entitled to a one-third interest in all his realty. At the present time his income is actually about $100,000.

Despite this large income, Howard Gould failed to pay the taxes on a parcel of property at Fifth avenue and Seventy-third street, standing in the name of himself and wife. The tax lien for $54,600 on the premises was advertised for sale and purchased by George Gould in November, 1912.

George Gould then instituted a Supreme Court proceeding against Howard Gould and Katherine C. Gould and asked the court to decree that the property should be sold, because Howard Gould has failed to pay the taxes. The court has decreed that the property should be sold, because Howard Gould has failed to pay the taxes.

Mrs. Gould states that Howard Gould has an income of $100,000 and says it is absurd to think he cannot pay the taxes. She says the plan was arranged between the two brothers to deprive this defendant of her right of dower in the premises.

Mrs. Gould says this litigation is an elaborately framed plan to defraud her dower interest.

FAREWELL TO GOULD'S IN SUICIDE NOTE

That Thomas H. Dalton, clerk of the Boston Police Court, had long planned to kill himself and his children was the declaration today of friends and relatives. Only last Saturday night he came home and said to his wife:

"Darling, I love you better than anything in the wide world. If I were to die I should want you to die with me."

Dalton shot his wife and his two children and then killed himself. Dalton killed his infant daughter, but his wife and eight-year-old son will recover.

LETTER IN POCKET.—Dalton had a farewell letter and a group picture of his family in the pocket of his nightshirt. The letter and picture were found when the undertaker took charge of the body.

Mrs. Mary Wallace, who lives here in the Daltons at No. 118 Tremont street, told this story of the shooting today:

"Mr. Dalton came home Saturday from a crossing trip along the Maine coast. He looked well and strong and seemed happy, but he heard his wife tell me she didn't feel well. He said, 'Well, it's pretty hard when your body is sick, but when your nerves are sick, it's worse.'"

LAUGHED AND TALKED.—"Monday I heard him laughing and talking. Sunday night he told his son Joseph, who usually slept with him in the hammocks on the porch, to go to bed. He said, 'Go to bed, son. I'll be up in the morning.'"

"The boy was sleeping inside at midnight. Mr. Dalton came in from the piazza. The nurse who was with him asked her—she was Miss Lillian Constance—to go into the kitchen and make him a milk shake. She started, and the minute she had left the room he began to shoot."

Dalton shot with terrible effect. One shot killed his five-week-old baby, Priscilla. Another shot dangerously wounded his son. A fourth shot inflicted a slight wound upon his wife, and she ran screaming to summon help. Then he bent the fourth shot into his own brain.

WORRIED OVER CONDITION.—Mrs. Dalton rushed into the hallway and attracted the attention of William Dalton, who lives in an apartment below. He telephoned to the police and a surgeon. The command of Sergeant Morath was sent. The mother and son were taken to the hospital.

Dalton was granted a leave of absence from his court duties about two months ago on account of ill health. It is thought he was worried over his condition as he expressed fear that what would become of his family.

Martin's Not a Candidate.—John J. Martin, president of the Massachusetts Real Estate Association, in a statement today declares that the pressure of personal business will make it impossible for him to be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Governor.

H. W. RUSSELL 'SOLD MY BONDS' SAYS HIS WIFE

Mrs. Halsey W. Russell, wife of the Malden man whose arrest came as a great surprise to his friends and clubmates in the Malden Club and in the Malden Lodge of Elks, declared today that her husband owed to Lee, Higginson & Co. bonds worth more than $1,000, so that he could buy a farm.

Russell was arrested at Fort Kent, New York, after a chase through three States. He will be brought back to Boston. The bonds, Mrs. Russell says, belonged to her.

"He never should have taken those bonds from me," said Mrs. Russell. "He knew that they were in my name. But he was so anxious lately to buy a farm and go and settle upon it. He wanted that money to buy the farm. I told him again and again that I did not want to live upon a farm."

Lee, Higginson & Co. tried to sell the bonds after buying them, when it was found that Russell had no right to sell them, as his wife had secured an injunction preventing him from doing so.

Russell has been talking for some time and went off with the money obtained from selling the bonds, leaving his wife in the dark as to his whereabouts, which she found out only last Wednesday.

COURT IN UPROAR AS CAILLAUX DEFECES OF HIS WIFE

PARIS, July 27.—Joseph Caillaux today projected himself into the spotlight again at the trial of his wife, Mme. Henriette Caillaux, for the murder of Editor Gaston Calmette.

While his accused wife sat in a pathetic huddled heap, still suffering from a collapse that caused her to swoon in her cell earlier in the day, the former premier of France created a turmoil.

The trial was running smoothly, with the defense presenting testimony to show that Calmette's life might have been saved had the physicians attending him acted promptly, when Caillaux leaped to his feet and rushed to the witness stand.

He demanded an opportunity to refute the allegations made by M. Etienne Flécher, chief of the prosecution. Without waiting for the court to give or withhold permission, Caillaux launched into an attack on Flécher, a journalist employed by Le Figaro, of which Calmette was the editor.

Earlier in the trial Flécher had testified that Caillaux had attempted, with a note of $200, to bribe him to testify in behalf of Mme. Caillaux.

SHOUT FOR A BRIDE.

"It's a damnable lie!" shouted Caillaux. "I never tried to bribe him. The truth was that Flécher approached me and asked me for a bribe. I turned him like the dog he is."

By that time his wife, who was in an uproar, Friends and foes of Caillaux were cheering and waving their hats. He was finally secured Attorney André Hesse to defend him.

He went to Dr. Bellot, one of the physicians called when Calmette was shot, to ask him to testify for Mme. Caillaux, but she stated when he "found" Calmette, he wanted payment for his evidence.

This again aroused Caillaux to action, assuming the stand amid interjected shouts and groans, he presented documents to prove that money had been sought from the defense.

Then he proceeded to attack Le Figaro, a rival newspaper, and produced Calmette's will, in which the slain man requested a fortune of $250,000.

By this he put the thought before the jurors that Calmette had acquired his wealth by blackmailing persons whose secret had been learned by reporters of his newspaper staff.

COUNSEL INTERRUPTS.

A this point M. Chau, counsel for the Calmette children, interrupted by demanding:

"Where did you obtain this will?"

"Tell me where Calmette got this paper he used against me and I'll tell where I obtained the will," returned Caillaux hotly, while his sympathizers cheered.

Chau made no response as Caillaux waited for this challenge, and the ex-premier then gave a detailed list of stock shares left by Calmette, amounting to $1,000,000.

Further, he mentioned the friendship for M. Chaurand, head of the Louvre stores, and later his companionship with Mme. Bourin, both of whom bequeathed Calmette several million dollars.

Chau feared he had lost his footing and shaking his fist in the face of M. Caillaux cried:

"Stop this mad-singing at a dead man!"

The two men engaged in a sharp altercation, but the words were drowned by the cheers and hisses that came from the audience.

COURT IS ADJOURNED.

The court became so bitter and the confusion so great that court was adjourned.

Caillaux renewed the conflict when the session was resumed, declaring that he concerned himself not only with the trial, but with the side matters, he protested against an article in the Figaro charging him with suborning witnesses.

He said he was not a woman and live on her generosity.

Chau, who had been in the court, said he was not a woman and live on her generosity.

Straw Ballot Wins Mme. Caillaux Two Years in Prison

PARIS, July 27.—Lawyers and auditors of the Palace of Justice took a straw ballot today to determine the prevailing belief as to what the jury's verdict would be.

One hundred and seventy-four members of the legal profession voted that Mme. Caillaux should get two years' imprisonment.

One hundred and four decided she should be acquitted.

When the result was made known to the defendant she smiled wearily and then put her handkerchief to her eyes.

That the physicians who attended Calmette had been remiss.

An operation should have been performed in the Figaro office in order to check the bleeding," he declared.

"Given if the transportation of the patient to a hospital were necessary, the operation should have been performed there immediately."

"The witness was asked when he declared that it was a physician's duty to take a chance, even if the patient died."

Tid-Bits! $1,000 Cup of Coffee Realistic Thief Movie Swims in Hell Gate

ELLSWORTH, N. Y.—Michael Lynch, a bricklayer, employed by Benjamin Pennell, dropped a cup of coffee from a scaffold upon Mrs. Kate Prescott, who then collected $1,000 from Pennell for personal injuries.

CHARLSTADT, N. J.—While watching moving pictures of a thief taking a purse from a man's pocket, John Jamison was relieved of his wallet and $25 by a pickpocket.

NEW YORK.—With his hands and feet manacled, Henry Anthony swam through the dangerous currents of Hell Gate. He covered a mile in 34 minutes.

GRANVILLE, N. J.—Marcellus might gossip about his wife's affairs, but he was not allowed to do so. He was forced to hunt a job. He tried in several places and was finally forced to ask for work at the John-Manville plant.

They set him to work mending shoes. The bride stood it for a time, but then Tommy and his wife left three good Broadway editors. "And the bride to take care of them," she declared.

So their courtship here is empty. When questioned today Marcellus said he didn't want to take any more. But, yes, he admitted that Mrs. Manville has gone. It may be a long time before the bride and groom are reunited.

LAWSON'S ROUGHING IT IN OREGON

Tom Lawson, half brother of the state senator or Sen. Henry Haven, is roughing it in Oregon.

He was discovered in the mountains hunting for big game and incidentally enjoying himself.

Just where Lawson is, in the exact spot in the universe that is not clear, but one thing is certain: he is not in his home in Boston.

To reach him on the Oregon range on the Indian reservation, the home of his son-in-law, if it could be done, would be a feat. Lawson is a former Harvard athlete, then six days by train.
